Course Interested in: 14397 424: Flood and Resource Hydrology

Pre-requisite: Hydraulics 354

Corresponding course from Home University:

EGB371 Engineering Hydraulics

This is an intermediate level unit that provides knowledge on hydraulic principles and its application in engineering. The topics to be covered are: Units and properties of fluids, Forces in static fluids, Buoyancy, Kinematics and continuity, The energy equation and the momentum equation for real fluids, frictional flow in pipes, application of pipe resistance formulae, fitting losses, pump characteristics and selection and pipes, Network analysis, similitude and dimensional analysis and lift and drag. The knowledge gained in this unit will be further developed in an advanced level unit later in the course.

Content

- Units and properties of fluids
- Pressure and pressure measurement
- Forces in static fluids
- Buoyancy
- Kinematics, continuity and momentum equation
- The energy equation for ideal and real fluids
- Frictional flow through pipes
- Application of pipe resistance formulae and assessment of minor losses
- Pump characteristics and selection
- Pipe network analysis
- Similitude and dimensional analysis
- Lift and drag

Department of Mechanical Engineering

Postgraduate courses need to be confirmed and registered for earlier than expected.
